

Calgary Herald – January 5, 2012

David Parker

After Bob Brown retired from KPMG he and his wife, Karen, started a second career as co-founders of Kensington Riverside Inn. A second retirement after the sale of the boutique inn saw Brown change his focus from entrepreneur to social entrepreneur and he launched Open to Grow, a new Calgary-based microcredit charity. At the end of last year it made its first micro-loan to 15 low income women in Guatemala. Congratulations.

David Parker appears Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. Read his columns at CalgaryHerald.com/Business.

He can be reached at 403-830-4622 or e-mail info@DavidParker.ca

© Copyright (c) The Calgary Herald